Chinese march for democracy

by Kathy Wilhelm
Associated Press writer

BEIJING — More than 150,000 students and workers calling for democracy pushed through police lines Thursday and marched cheering and singing through central Beijing in communist China's biggest protest ever.

Workers by the thousands joined the students, giving them popsicles and bread in their strongest act of support in 11 days of protests.

Beijing residents escorted the students on bicycles and foot and tried to shield them from soldiers and police, who had issued harsh warnings against marches.

But the security forces were unarmed, and although they pushed fiercely against advancing students in a vain effort to halt their march, they did not use other force against them.

There was no immediate information on any injuries in the crush.

The march turned instead into a jubilant procession. For more than 15 hours, the students marched through streets and under overpasses jammed with thousands of applauding people.

The march was the biggest and most dramatic action yet by Beijing students in their campaign for sweeping democratic reforms, including a free press and an end to corruption.

In Washington, the State Department called for restraint on the part of Chinese authorities and hoped the demonstrations would remain peaceful.

"The United States believes in and supports the right of peaceful assembly, including peaceful protest and the freedom of expression," department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said.

Even before the march ended, the government announced it was willing to hold talks with the students "at any time" if the students return to their campuses and "adopt a calm and reasonable attitude."

Student worker raises planned

by James A. Tinker
staff reporter

While lawmakers in Washington continue to iron out proposals that would increase the national minimum wage, the University already has plans to raise its entry level pay rates by as early as September.

A probable 30-cent increase will be recommended by the Budget Committees to University President Paul Olscamp and the Board of Trustees, Christopher Dalton, vice president of planning and budgeting, said.

This would raise the campus minimum wage to $3.65, but it would not necessarily raise the pay of all positions by 30 cents.

"Exactly how (the wage increase) will be done has not yet been determined," Dalton said.

Leo Navin, professor of economics, said two bills currently under consideration by the U.S. Congress may raise the minimum wage to as much as $4.55 with a training period of two months.

However, President George Bush has promised to veto either of the proposals unless concessions are made, Navin added. He said the President has called for a minimum wage of no more than $4.25 with a training period of six months.

A training period would allow sub-minimum wages, but when that period expires the pay rate would jump to at least the min-

Greek alumni remember rules

Editor's Note: This is the last part in a series addressing the changing facets of greek social life.

by Scott Korpowski
copy editor

What goes around comes around.

Recent restrictions hampering greek parties may appear to be new oppression by the University, but alcohol regulations are nothing new to the campus.

Limiting fraternity alcohol to one keg at parties has struck many greeks as unfair, yet campus regulations were once more harsh.

One Pulling Puppy

A three-month-old basset hound named Emily bites at the foot of Bart Mills, senior music major, in front of University Hall Thursday afternoon. Mills, who owns Emily, says allowing her to bite his foot is the only way he can get her to follow him due to the puppy's short attention span.

University picks 1989 'number'

by Angela Blandina
assistant news editor

On July 29, 1915, the University graduated its first class.

On Saturday, a person randomly selected to represent the Class of 1989 will be introduced by University President Paul Olscamp as the 100,000th graduate.

In honor of this occasion, 25 of the University's accomplished alumni also will be recognized during the ceremonies.

According to Cliff Boutelle, director of public relations, the alumni were selected on behalf of the University.

"They won't be singled out as the 'best,' rather, as representative of the many Bowling Green graduates who have went on to success," he said.

The 25 accomplished graduates were chosen by an alumni committee based on nominations sought from people such as faculty members and alumni. Selections of the 25 were made in February, Boutelle said.

All the representatives will be returning to campus for the commencement exercises and a dinner in their honor Friday.

A Distinguished Alumnus Award also will be presented during Saturday's ceremony.

Linda Welshimer Wagner-Martin, a professor at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, will be the 30th recipient of the award — given by the University Alumni Association.

Wagner-Martin received bachelor of arts and bachelor of science in education degrees, magna cum laude with honors in English from the University in 1957.

She also received a master of arts in English in 1959 and was one of the first two University students to earn a doctorate in 1963.

Fine Arts extension slated

by Jeff Batdorf
staff reporter

The University has received an allocation of $9.1 million from the state of Ohio for an extension to the Fine Arts Building.

Tom Hilty, director of the School of Art, said the addition would centralize the five different art divisions in one building. Currently, sections of the art program are taught in buildings scattered across campus.

"Our hope is in the future to create a fine art center that will tie all the wings together," Hilty said.

The five art divisions include sculpting, glasswork, ceramics, painting and design.

The request for the new 61,000 square foot addition began in the early '70s after the School of Art temporarily moved most of these divisions into the Art Annex on Reed Street, Hilty said.

Other University locations for various art techniques include the second floor of the Health Center, where art classes such as computer design are taught and Eppler Center, where graduate studios are located.

Moving these programs into the addition would make available 16,000 square feet of space to house photography, printing and painting facilities, he said.

"At this time the architects have been selected and the planning committee has developed a programming report dealing with issues like who needs to be located to who and providing a clear understanding of the guts of the thing," Hilty

Atlantis revives space program

by Howard Benedict
Associated Press writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Five astronauts tracked a perfect countdown Thursday as technicians prepared the shuttle Atlantis for a midafternoon launch today. The mission will propel NASA's "Magellan" probe to Venus and revive America's deep-space science program.

"After an 11-year gap in the planetary program, we're anxious to get started," said John H. Gephiede, Magellan project manager.

Officials described the countdown as the smoothest of four since the Challenger disaster. The chance of high winds provided slight concern as NASA looked forward to liftoff in an unusually tight launch window that opens at 2:24 p.m. and lasts just 23 minutes.

Magellan, ready for its 15-month flight to Venus, "is 100 percent healthy and ticking along," said Lennard Fisk, NASA's chief scientist.

"We're ready to go fly," said Richard Truly, who heads the shuttle program and is the incoming NASA administrator.

Atlantis' cargo is the Magellan spacecraft which has a radar system powerful enough to pierce the dense sulfuric acid clouds of Venus and map its surface. The mission costs $550 million, not including the $225 million cost of the four-day shuttle flight.

Magellan's radar images, relayed to Earth and enhanced by computer, should reveal details as small as 100 yards across.

University students to march in D.C. in protest of issues

While most University students will spend this weekend preparing for finals or enjoying the seasonal weather, some will be spending their time for a less personal cause — participating in the annual march to end racism and cutbacks in Washington D.C.

The march, entitled, "We Won't Take Four More Years" deals with "everything from the homeless to racism and many other issues that concern the national budget," said Tim Strauss, a member of the Peace Coalition and coordinator for the trip.

The purpose of the march is not only to bring attention to the issues but to show how all the issues are connected, Strauss said.

"This march gives people a chance to show the issues are all tied together," he said. "Once others see the relationship, then something can be done."

The annual march is endorsed by various groups throughout the country and has a turnout of about 50,000, Strauss said.

Interested students may contact the United Christian Fellowship Center to make a $10 reservation for transportation, which will leave today at 12:30 p.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Nobel Peace Laureate to speak at branch May 5

A Nobel Peace Laureate will be the speaker at the University's Firelands College commencement May 5.

Betty Williams, who will speak at 7:30 p.m. in the gymnasium, will talk about "The Individual's Role in World Peace." The speech is centered around her experiences in the peace movement which she began in 1976.

Williams will also be speaking on May 4 in conjunction with "Unifying Ohio for Peace Week."

Suntans and sunburns given to deserving

Each year in December, The BG News staff awards candy canes and lumps of coal to the deserving.

In continuing the tradition, the spring staff has decided to honor members of the University community and the city of Bowling Green with spring versions of the awards. In accordance with the warm weather and the sunbathers which populate the campus, suntans are being given to those who have performed outstandingly and sunburns to those who did not meet expectations.

■ A 'smoky' sunburn to University President Paul Olscamp's crusade to infringe on the rights of smokers by proposing a smoke-free campus.

■ A golden-brown suntan to Registrar Duane Whitmire and Susan Pugh, director of registration and scheduling, for getting the new STAR telephone registration system operational and hopefully eliminating the five-hour lines at drop/add.

■ A sunburn in duplicate to Dwight Burlingame, vice president of University relations, and Olscamp for the decision to eliminate the Symphonic Band from commencement exercises. Although budget limitations prevail, accommodations should be made to continue the tradition.

■ A slight tan to the Board of Trustees for finally accepting that an alternative building is necessary to prevent students from becoming "lounge lizards." Although construction of the transitional facility will eliminate the inconvenience students face when living in motels or study lounges, the Trustees may get burned by reality when they estimate the building will be completed in October.

■ A Jamaican suntan to Fran Voll and the women's basketball team and to Jerry York and the hockey team for outstanding seasons which carried them both into NCAA tournaments. Suntans also go to athletes Paulette Backstrom, Greg Parks and Kyle Kramer who have earned national recognition for their performances at the University.

■ A sunburn to men's basketball coach Jim Laranaga who now has posted back-to-back losing seasons.

■ A progressive suntan to the Office of Minority Affairs and Affirmative Action for addressing pertinent issues such as racism, sexism, and the needs of the handicapped at the University.

■ A suntan to the University Activities Organization for being evasive and unwilling to work with the media when performers visited the campus. However, may the burn fade to tan for bringing two major groups to campus this year — UB40 and Violent Femmes.

■ A sizzling sunburn to the Undergraduate Student Government for announcing at a meeting this semester that it was unaware of how much money remained in its budget. Controversy is nothing new to USG, but controversy about simple adding and subtracting? Come on!

■ A Constitutional suntan to Key Photographer Mark Thalman for standing up for the First Amendment right to take photographs — even if city police decide they have the right to stop him.

■ A sunburn to Robert Maurer, local landlord, for either knowing or not knowing the zoning regulations when he contracted with the Pi Beta Phis to construct their sorority house. May the burn be intensified because modifications must now be made to the basement of the house to meet the regulations he should have followed in the first place.

■ A suntan to Bowling Green Mayor Edwin Miller for mixing with University students — treating them with the same respect granted to other community members. His accessibility should be a model for all public officials.

Take Socrates' advice

Next Saturday, about 1,700 seniors and 330 graduate students will receive their degrees and move on to bigger and better things. I won't be one of them due to some little detail — I think the Dean calls it a dissertation — that I have to take care of.

But it's those who have finished whom I want to address today because of my fondness and respect for them and also because the column I had intended to write on Morton Downey's facial tattoo didn't work out.

So, class of '89, this one's for you.

We are living in an age in which our educational system is in chaos. Nowadays you can't pick up the newspaper or turn on the television without seeing a report on the miserable state of education. Why, the other day, I read that four out of five graduating high school seniors thought "The Bill of Rights" was a song recorded by Earl Chandler in the early '60s.

There are plenty of examples of ignorance in universities as well, and I'm not referring only to the attempt to make the University a smoke-free zone.

On a general knowledge quiz, one of my freshman composition students last year identified Harriet Tubman as a former president of the United States. This would certainly have come as news to her.

Another student identified Charlie Chaplin as a movie actor who lived in the 17th century. Remember, those were the days before the birth of Benjamin Franklin, who, several of my students said, "invented electricity."

I do not share this information with you to make you feel as if you are a member of a stupid generation. Rather, I want you to know that when it comes to learning, some members of your generation have been, shall we say, underachievers.

This state of affairs should come as a surprise to few. Whereas it used to be said that poor grades as an undergraduate could get you in trouble, it is now said that poor grades as an undergraduate could get you the vice presidency.

Nowhere does our culture provide a young person with motivation to learn. True, "Sesame Street" fosters such an attitude, but one would feel awfully silly watching it with the guys in the frat house.

For the most part, people who value learning are portrayed on television and in the movies as funny-looking, geeky social lepers. When will Hollywood cast a popular actor such as Sylvester Stallone as a conscientious student? Perhaps when he learns to read.

Many of my students have told me they would read a daily paper and watch the evening news if what they found there weren't so bleak. Take the Alaskan oil spill. Many environmentalists predict we'll have a similar disaster in the next decade. It may soon get to the point where Mrs. Paul's fish sticks will be used at gas stations for lube jobs.

And yet, is not knowing about the world around us any solution? Granted, some methods of avoiding consciousness are very popular. Why, it wouldn't surprise me a bit to see binge drinking become a competition in the '92 Olympics.

But putting one's head in the sand is no answer, unless of course the question is, "According to legend, what do ostriches do to avoid being seen?"

Wasn't it Socrates who said, "The unexamined life is not worth living?" Or did he say, "The unexamined life is not worth leaving?" Those Greek translations are so confusing!

Assume for a minute that the first version is correct. That would mean that the act of examining life helps make life meaningful. If so, the courses one took in college to help sharpen the mind wouldn't be tossed in the dustbin once the degree was received. One could continue to examine life, regardless of his or her career.

So here's hoping the class of '89 makes Socrates proud. And that's no joke.

Hergert, an instructor in English from Slayton, Minn., is a columnist for The News.

Night guards are enforcing policy

I would like to thank those individuals who felt it necessary to be so kind this past Beta weekend. I work as a night guard in Prout Hall. This past weekend we had night guards on duty from 9 p.m. Friday until 5 p.m. Saturday. These extended hours were for the protection of all Prout residents. During this 20-hour time period, only Prout residents and their signed-in guests were allowed in the building. In addition to this policy the lobby restrooms were not available to non-residents. This is where my thank-yous apply.

Thank you to all individuals who felt the need to shout obscenities at me and call me lovely names like "bitch." Thank you to all individuals who felt the need to stomp out of the building, slamming doors as you went. And last, but not least, thank you to all individuals who made such a big effort to be so thoughtful and considerate for my sake and the sake of Prout residents.

The way I feel about Beta also applies to other times of the year as well. All residence halls on campus have policies concerning signing in guests and quiet hours. These policies are enforced for the protection of people who live in residence halls. I'm sure you do not want people who do not live in your building allowed in at random. This HAS happened, and many times items are destroyed or even stolen. Guess who pays? You do! As for the quiet hour policies, those are established and enforced for the sake of residents as well. I'm sure if you have an 8 a.m. class or other commitment, you would like to be able to get some sleep without having to worry about noisy neighbors.

I don't make tons of money doing this job, and I certainly don't make enough to deal with some of the unbelievably rude residents and guests that I have to. So, the next time you are going to a hall you don't live in, or you're having a guest over (BG student or not), please make sure you have your ID or your guest has his/her ID. And the next time you think about turning up your stereo or being loud alone, or with guests, please think about your neighbors and have some consideration. I was hired to enforce hall policies and I'm only trying to do my job.

UAA does not get recognition

On behalf of the members of the Undergraduate Alumni Association and myself, I would like to lodge a complaint with the staff of The BG News.

Unfortunately, UAA has been the unsung organization. On numerous occasions, The News has misprinted our name as the University Alumni Association or has even gone so far as to misinterpret our programs to the University Activities Organization (UAO).

As I read the April 18 edition of The News, I discovered a picture of our own first annual mud volleyball tournament placed next to the headline "Greek Week 'evolves.'" Because the cutline failed to mention the Undergraduate Alumni Association as the sponsor, many readers were misled, believing our Mud Volleyball tournament was Greek-sponsored.

Ironically, one of the major purposes behind the tournament is to encourage campus-wide involvement. The Undergraduate Alumni Association and its members have put a lot of time, money and effort into its programs, and would like to be respectfully recognized for this.

Unnoticed quake shakes BG

by Beth Church
assistant wire editor

An earthquake registering 4.7 on the Richter scale went unnoticed by most Bowling Green residents Thursday afternoon.

The natural phenomenon was shocking enough, however, to be recorded at the University's seismology laboratory, one of only three in the state.

The earthquake occurred more than 350 miles away in New Madrid, Mo., at 12:48 p.m., according to Jay Parrish, director of the seismology laboratory and assistant professor of geology.

"4.7 (on the Richter scale) is relatively large. You can usually feel a measurement of 3," Parrish said.

People as far as Paducah, Ky. reported feeling the earthquake, he said.

The largest earthquake in the United States occurred in 1812 in this southeastern Missouri town, which lies near the borders of both Arkansas and Tennessee. That earthquake — which was not measured because equipment designed to record tremors had not yet been invented — ran along the New Madrid fault zone.

"If (the fault) is still active, there is a possibility for a bigger earthquake to occur," Parrish said.

"However, several relatively small quakes could also be a way to relieve stress in the fault."

Predicting earthquakes is an especially difficult task, he said.

"Even if we could predict them, no one would know what to do to prepare," Parrish said.

The seismograph, located in the basement of Overman Hall, registered this quake as lasting 17 minutes, he said.

Mark Rosenberg, a graduate student of geology, was attending the seismograph when the earthquake occurred.

"Nine out of 10 days, nothing happens," Rosenberg said. "This time it did — it was pretty exciting."

Rosenberg is responsible for all repairs and maintenance of the seismology lab, which is funded by an annual $2,000 grant from the Amaco Co. — not the University.

Six grads receive Shanklin Awards

by Laura Hardy
staff reporter

Six graduate students were recognized Thursday night for their research efforts.

The Charles E. Shanklin Award for Research Excellence was awarded to a first- and second-place winner in three categories. The students each gave a 15-minute presentation of their topic, which was followed by a five-minute question and answer session.

Placing first in the Social and Behavioral Sciences category was William Hathaway from the psychology department. Nancy Breen, also from the department of psychology, received second place.

In the area of Science and Mathematics, Alphonse Amey, from the department of mathematics and statistics, placed first. Laura Juarez de Ku, from the biology department, received second place.

Barbara Bywaters, from the English department, placed first in the Arts and Humanities category, while Robin Haynes, from the department of American Culture, placed second.

The first-place winners will each receive $800 and the second-place winners will receive $300. The prize money has been increased $50 this year, according to Loring Crepeau, a member of the Honors and Awards Committee.

For the second year, the Outstanding Contributor to Graduate Education Award was also presented during the ceremony. This year's recipient was Mark Gromko from the department of biology.

Findlay prof takes English dept. post

by Roger McCoy
reporter

A faculty member at Findlay College will assume the position of chairman of the University's English department next fall.

Richard Gebhardt, recently hired to fill the spot, was selected by a six-member committee from the English department. Alice Calderonello, professor of English, headed the committee.

She said Gebhardt is well-qualified for the job.

"He has a national publication record and he is a nationally-known scholar," she said.

Calderonello said a major factor in choosing Gebhardt was his editorship of College Composition and Communication. This quarterly publication deals with the theory and practice of writing, speaking and teaching English at the college level, she said.

According to Calderonello, it is "the largest, most prestigious reference journal in rhetoric and literature."

In addition, Gebhardt is a member of the English Association of Northwest Ohio. "He is involved on regional, state and national levels," Calderonello said.

Lester Barber, professor of English and interim chair of that department, said he is willing to relinquish his position to Gebhardt.

"I've had two complete terms as chair, and this year as interim chair," he said. "I said that I would not stand to be elected for a third term."

One term as chair of the department lasts four years, so this is Barber's ninth year in the position.

USG promises improved output

by Laura Hardy
staff reporter

Increasing cooperation within the Undergraduate Student Government and with other organizations will be primary factors in improving the group's productivity and image.

Kevin Coughlin, USG president-elect, said the importance of USG committee meetings will be emphasized and senators will be expected to play a greater role in student government.

"It is important for senators and cabinet members to be informed and for their goals to be clear cut and well-defined," Coughlin said. "The keys will be in keeping up communication and having strong committee chairs."

Coughlin said USG also will extend its support of events sponsored by University organizations beyond financial assistance. Such support will include active participation in these events by USG members, he said.

USG will take more fiscal responsibility under the 1989-90 administration, Coughlin said. He said next fall he will present to the General Assembly a budget that will include projected fixed costs, election and other government-related costs.

"The General Assembly is going to know what these costs are so they don't squander money away on co-sponsorship," he said.

"We don't have a large budget in comparison with those of student governments at other universities, so we have to weigh what's in the best interest of all students."

Coughlin said one of USG's primary goals for the next academic year will be to compile and distribute to the student body course evaluations for business classes so the students will be able to use them by the time they have to register for Spring 1990 classes.

The evaluation booklets will include information on business classes and professors based on results of 4,000 surveys distributed this semester, Coughlin said. Although he said many teachers and students are not in favor of these evaluations because they believe it will be "dangerous and unfair for teachers," Coughlin said this is not the intention.

"These evaluations will not grade teachers," he said. "They will include information such as how well a teacher speaks English, how much work is required in a particular course and what the grading policy is."

"We have to get across to the students that these booklets will save them a lot of hassle and let them match their style with the teachers' styles," he added.

The course evaluation booklets will be tangible evidence to the student body that USG is doing something productive in the students' interests, Coughlin said.

"This will be something the students can use — something they can touch," he said. "USG sponsors many events that benefit students, but these are often overlooked."

Coughlin said he is pleased with goals for next year already underway by members of his cabinet.

Student teacher gets high mark

by Greg Plagens
reporter

A University senior received an honorable mention in the 1989 National Education Association's student-teacher competition for her lesson in ninth-grade algebra.

Viva Hathaway, secondary mathematics major, was among 18 students from a field of 321 student teachers to receive honorable mentions in the nationwide competition.

The NEA is one of the two largest teacher associations — the other being the American Federation of Teachers, according to Marilyn Braatz, public relations specialist for the education department.

Student teachers from both fall and spring semester were eligible for the competition and had to submit a 30- to 45-minute videotape of a planned lesson, Braatz said. Applicants also were required to submit an explanation of why they wanted to be a teacher.

Hathaway said she wants students to gain an appreciation for learning.

"I feel that genuine education is more than just passing a test and hope to instill this in my students," she said.

The student teachers were judged on their ability to present a solid lesson and have a good introduction, review and activity to keep students involved, Hathaway said.

Addition

According to information released by the University Architect Office, the architectural firms picked for the job include Munger, Munger and Associates from Toledo and Buckminster-Fuller, Fadao and Zung from Cleveland. Lance Teaman, associate University architect, said the project took a long time to get underway because of its size.

"Because of the normal state process of obtaining funds, it is not uncommon for a project of this size to take this long," Teaman said.

Teaman said construction will "most likely" take place on the north and east sides of the Fine Arts Building.

"It is uncertain at this time if the addition will require removal or relocation of the basketball courts facing the east side of the building, but it is something the committee is considering," Teaman said.

He said construction is slated to begin in May 1991 and completed in August 1992.

Wages

imum wage.

Navin said many Democrats believe they are already making concessions because, "if the minimum wage had kept pace with the consumer price index, then today's minimum wage would be $4.65."

Jane Schimpf, director of Food Operations, the largest student employer on campus with more than 700 student employees, offers a starting pay of $3.45 to entice needed employees, she said.

Deb Heineman, associate director of financial aid and student employment, said should the 30-cent increase proposal be passed, however, Food Operations' entry level pay may only rise to the campus-wide rate of $3.65. She said raising wages may not be financially feasible in some instances.

"Cutbacks may be possible if more money is not allotted to department budgets," she said.

Navin agreed that, in general, a wage increase could lead to the elimination of some jobs, but would not be threatening to most positions.

Greeks

According to Bill Cameron, a 1951 University graduate, his fraternity experience was drastically different from that of current greeks.

"It was a totally dry campus with very tight regulations," Cameron said. "Discipline was also very severe."

Among the "tight" regulations was the total prohibition of alcohol. Dating back to the University's founding, alcohol was forbidden on campus, yet was punished with merely a slap on the wrist.

After World War II, however, the influx of older student-veterans, coupled with new social standards, prompted the University Board of Trustees to adopt a strict, written alcohol policy.

According to the 1947 University Student Code: "... Being drunk or disorderly, or bringing alcoholic beverages on campus is prohibited. Penalty for violation ... is a minimum fine of $25; maximum penalty, suspension from university."

The 1959-60 Student Code included even harsher regulations on alcohol use: "The University expects each student to refrain from drinking alcoholic beverages in any form. Violation of this policy may lead to dismissal."

Despite the rules, Cameron said he enjoyed fraternity life in Alpha Sigma Phi. "We had a really good brotherhood. Fraternities and sororities contributed a lot more to campus than social life," he said.

Singing competitions and greek intramural athletics comprised the staple of the Alpha Sigs' 1951 social calendar, and Cameron said he remembers only one party with a sorority. Bob Kabat, a fraternity brother of Cameron, agreed that greeks' interests were less geared around social functions.

"Our original purpose was philanthropic. We weren't primarily social, our sole purpose for being there was to learn," Kabat said. "We did our playing in the military; now we were out to learn a skill that someone would be interested in."

Although education may have been the primary concern of the University's early greeks, drinking was still on their lists of priorities.

"Oh, we had our fun," Kabat said. "We drank our share of beer — in some cases enormous quantities, but we were seasoned (in the military), we'd done this before."

The bulk of Kabat's social life was non-alcoholic, however. Beyond intramurals and singing, Kabat said his fraternity would go hunting or fishing on weekends for entertainment.

By the 1960s greek social life had moved out of its infancy, but had not matured to today's standard. According to Carlton Schooley, a 1963 graduate, fraternity-sponsored parties were more frequent.

"Social life was not nearly what it is today," said Schooley, the current Sigma Phi Epsilon adviser. "We might go out once or twice a semester."

Jaunts to nearby towns for square dances or dry teas at the fraternity house were the basis of Schooley's social life.

"Social was the primary reason for joining a fraternity, but there were other benefits," Schooley said.

Reasons for joining sororities apparently ran along social lines, as well.

According to Cheri Briggs, an alumna of Alpha Phi and a 1969 University graduate, most of her social life revolved around fraternities.

"If it weren't for fraternity parties, I really don't know what else you'd do. If you didn't go out with a fraternity guy, you spent a lot of time in the dorm lounges sitting around talking," she said.

Sorority pledges attended weekly mandated events with a fraternity's pledge class. These dry events generally consisted of dances or baseball games, Briggs said. Fraternity parties were the biggest aspect of her social life, however.

"I remember a lot of Rolling Rock parties. Guys had a lot of alcoholic parties off-campus, and there was a lot of fixing-up," she said.

Sororities had few if any functions of their own, however.

"We had our Spring Formal, which was a pretty big thing," Briggs said. "I would have liked sororities to hold parties, but that just wasn't done."

In January 1969, the University Board of Trustees voted 5-3 in favor of allowing beer on campus, and alcoholic fraternity "teas" developed shortly thereafter.

The late 1970s and early 1980s were marked with seemingly unlimited kegs at teas, yet apparently less emphasis on alcohol.

Scott Rankin, Pi Kappa Phi '84, said although beer poured freely throughout teas, getting drunk was not the emphasis.

"Drinking wasn't the main thing, it was dancing and camaraderie — we had a good time at parties," Rankin said. "When alcohol was allowed, it wasn't a big thing. I guess when something is taboo, you want it more."

Non-alcoholic activities were enjoyed as well as teas, Rankin said. Intramurals and brotherhood activities were also large parts of greek entertainment, he added.

"When I was at BG, the teas were big," said Steve Crowe, Pi Kappa Phi '86. "It was the only time you really got together as a group with your whole house in a social setting."

Although teas made up a big part of Crowe's greek life, he said he reluctantly favors the current limitations on greek parties.

"Back then, I know I wouldn't have liked it much, but now I don't know if it's such a bad idea," he said. "With all this liability, if someone gets a little too crazy, the house can be held accountable."

Enjoying "basically unlimited kegs," Crowe said his fraternity's rare attempts at dry theme teas were unsuccessful.

"We tried promoting drinking responsibility. People would come, but they wouldn't stay. I guess you can't teach an old dog new tricks," Crowe said.

Discipline in the form of tighter alcohol regulations by Ohio legislators and Greek Life, however, is teaching the greek "dog" to roll over.

"It's kind of like a challenge, you know, 'prove it wrong,'" Crowe said. "BG greeks will do well for themselves."

BG looks to shoot down BSU

by Brian Hollenbeck
sports reporter

Bowling Green's softball team has been body slammed into the lower depths of the Mid-American Conference in the last couple weeks.

BG has lost eight of its last 10 Mid-American Conference games and currently resides in sixth place in the MAC at 8-10. Overall the squad holds a 16-26 mark.

The Falcons will try to turn the tide this weekend when Ball State visits BG's softball field for a pair of doubleheaders, with the action beginning Friday at 2 p.m. and 1 p.m. on Saturday.

Despite BG's unimpressive record, head coach Jacquie Joseph said her club can still have a successful season.

"I think there is a lot of softball left, and there's a good shot we can finish the season strong," Joseph said. "We still have the opportunity to play everybody that's ahead of us in the standings and I feel that's good."

BG pitching served up 19 hits to Kent State in two losses on Tuesday, but Joseph said she isn't worried about her pitching staff.

"This last doubleheader with Kent State was the first time our pitching didn't do well," Joseph said. "Our pitching is what has kept us in many games this season."

Joseph said she just wants her team to go out and play mentally sound games this weekend.

"Our goal is to go out and better ourselves every game," Joseph said. "Kent State really beat us good, but I feel we've been our own worst enemy many times this season. I feel we've beaten ourselves many times during the year."

BG is having trouble with offensive productivity this season, hitting a mere .186 as a team, which ranks them last in the MAC. Because of the offensive woes, Joseph said the team has to play good defense in order to win.

"We need to play hard, and maintain our defense," Joseph said. "We just have to try and keep the scores down because we've only been scoring about three runs a game."

Ball State is currently in a second place tie with Kent State at 10-6 in the MAC. Toledo is atop the heap with a 16-4 conference mark.

BG's next 10 games are at home with Western Michigan coming into town on May 5-6 for a pair of doubleheaders, and league leader Toledo visiting on May 9 for a doubleheader.

— a showdown in Athens against rival Ohio University.Bowling Green is coming off a homestand in which they won four of five matches, including a conference win over Eastern Michigan. The team currently stands at 2-3 in the MAC and 12-11 overall.OU has fared much the same as the Falcons in conference play, as they have beaten EMU
(7-2) and lost to Miami (6-3),
Ball State (7-2), and WMU (6-3).
However, because of the Bobcats' performance in these matches, BG head coach Gene Orlando sees his team as the underdog going into the match
this weekend."They've played relatively well in the conference," he said.
"Last year we lost to them 7-2,
and both of us had the same team coming back. On paper, we probably shouldn't win, but we're just going to go out and play."The Falcons' J.P. Green at 2nd singles, Mike Hain at 4th singles, Steve Mudre at 5th singles, and Doug Dickinson at 6th singles all posted 4-1 records last week, and they will have to carry that momentum into Athens.

John Beathler (3rd), Matt
Kline (4th), and Doug Campbell
(5th) have all been impressive for OU this season, but the Falcons are prepared to face the challenge."We haven't really gotten along with this team very well," Green said. "It's never enough to have a winning record or to have two MAC wins. Nobody is satisfied at this point. We know what it takes, and we're going to go out and do it," he added.The MAC championships are just a week away, but the Falcons are keeping their attitude in perspective, and they aren't setting any unrealistic goals."We're not talking about a conference championship around here," Orlando said.
"We just play on emotion and guts so we can gain respect and pride with every match."Following Saturday's meeting with OU, the Falcons will return to Keefe Courts where they will host the conference championships May 5-7.Friday's first round starts at 12:30 p.m., with the semifinals beginning at 10 a.m. Saturday and the finals at 9 a.m. Sunday.

Cavaliers look to stop Bulls

RICHFIELD, O. (AP) — Going undefeated in six games against the Chicago Bulls during the regular season won't matter much once the two teams begin their best-of-five NBA playoff series Friday night, Cavaliers coach Lenny Wilkens said Thursday."I don't care what the expectations are," Wilkens said, after putting his team through a practice session at The Coliseum. "The pressure is always there.
That's nothing new.""We have to come out right from the opening tip and play hard and establish the tempo for ourselves. There's no question that you get a little pumped up for the playoffs."The Cavaliers went 57-25 in the regular season, good for second place behind Detroit in the Central Division. Chicago, despite its lack of success this season against Cleveland, still posted a 47-35 record in the same division.While the Cavaliers have won with a team concept
all season, Chicago's style is dominated by NBA scoring champion Michael Jordan, who took over point guard duties during the season and still managed 32.5 points a game.Wilkins said the Cavaliers must be concerned with Jordan, but not too concerned."He's a great player," Wilkins said. "Certainly,
we're not going to run
three or four guys at him.
We don't play that way.
We're going to make him work hard and try not to give him anything easy."

BG track gets break

Falcons travel to Hillsdale before MAC's

by Mike Drabenstott
sports reporter

Compared to weekends past and weekends awaiting, the men's and women's track teams can take a break of sorts as they travel to the Hillsdale Relays at Hillsdale, Mich., for non-scoring meets Saturday.

Men's co-coach Sid Sink said though the meet will be competitive, the team is not focusing on anything beyond individual improvement.

"It will be a low-key meet for us," Sink said. "We can relax compared to 'going for it' last weekend at the All-Ohio Invitational and two weeks from now in the Mid-American Conference Tournament."

"The keys will be to stay healthy and show some improvement."

The men received a scare Wednesday when their top sprinter and MAC point producer Ron Heard suffered a strained hamstring while running a 40-yard dash for football scouts.

Falcon head trainer Bill Jones told Sink that Heard will miss this weekend, but the strain does not appear to be major.

The women's team will have some of their top talent depleted at Hillsdale, as nine women will compete in the Drake Relays beginning today.

At Drake, BG will field 4x100, 4x400, 4x800 and distance medley relay teams along with five team members in individual events — Tammy Ashburn (javelin), Beth Manson (shot put, discus), Allison Brewton (high jump), Vicki Roseberry (discus) and Tracy Gaerke (1,500m).

Manson and Gaerke will both be looking to qualify for nationals at Drake. Last weekend, Manson's winning throw of 167-9 fell less than one foot short of the national mark of 168-8, while Gaerke continues to improve on her quest to qualify for nationals for the second consecutive year.

Sink said Gaerke will have a better opportunity to make the mark this weekend because she will face more competition than previous weekends.

The Falcon women at Hillsdale are looking to prepare for the MAC Championships also, according to the BG coaching staff.

In looking to the remainder of the season, Sink said the men want to improve upon last year's fifth-place finish in the MAC, and that "we're better this year when we're healthy than last year."

The women have higher aspirations. Their goal is to overtake perennial power Eastern Michigan for the MAC title.

Rose saga continues

CINCINNATI (AP) — A federal judge who accused the baseball commissioner of conducting a vendetta against Cincinnati Reds manager Pete Rose has removed himself from sentencing Franklin, Ohio, restaurateur Ronald Peters, who claims he took bets from Rose.

U.S. District Judge Carl B. Rubin sent a one-line order Thursday to the court clerk in Cincinnati taking himself off the case of Ronald Peters, who said in court April 3 that he will plead guilty to tax evasion and cocaine distribution charges.

The court clerk promptly assigned Judge S. Arthur Spiegel, also of the Cincinnati court, to sentence Peters. No sentencing date has been set. Spiegel is awaiting a presentencing report that court probation officers are compiling on Peters, who is out on bond.

Anthony Nyktas, assistant U.S. attorney in Cincinnati, declined comment Thursday on the change of judges. David Chicarelli, one of Peters' lawyers, was out of his Franklin office and unavailable for comment.

Peters, 31, could get sentenced to maximum punishment of 23 years in federal prison and $1.25 million in fines. But under his plea agreement with federal prosecutors, Peters probably will be sentenced to no more than 18 months and face no additional charges provided that he continues to cooperate with government investigators.

Linda Kloth, chief administrator of the federal court in Cincinnati, said Rubin was excusing himself from the Peters case because "he just felt there was an appearance of impropriety."

Franco's Fragments

Faces of friendship.

When I was walking back from class Tuesday, it finally hit me. I knew it was going to happen, but I never thought it would be so devastating.

I took my first "real" glimpse of the campus. The normal procedure had been to bury my head and rush to my destination. I thought to myself, "Man, it took me a long time to appreciate this."

I had this lump in my throat, the same tingling sensation I had when I said goodbye to my friends to travel 300 miles to get here. And the same lump I felt when my parents' car left my sight, leaving me in a foreign land.

I realized I was cashing in my chips, hanging 'em up. I was leaving for good. I knew I would probably write a sports column about the events occurring over my stay, so I closed my eyes to reflect on hockey, the sport which I've been most directly involved. But I didn't see any sticks or pucks. All I could picture were people, and it was a virtual slide show of smiles - faces of friendship.

I pictured new friends like Tim Maloney, the Friday Magazine editor, punching me in the arm up in the newsroom. I saw old acquaintances. Sports writers Mark Huntebrinker and Don Hensley leaning back in their chairs laughing and joking around, as always. I saw old roommates that have graduated, old girlfriends, fraternity brothers, and on and on.

I couldn't come up with anything from the classroom, couldn't think of the sporting events, I could only see my friends. I'm convinced it wasn't a mental block, but something that will flash back everytime I think about Bowling Green. And if it's all I remember, that's fine with me. I'll take those faces to my grave.

So after five and a half years, 50 pounds heavier (believe it), and only one degree later, next week it's, "Hi Mom and Dad, I'm home."

But in the meantime, I have some business to take care of, what the people who wanted me write this column want to hear,

my final view on my experiences covering BG sports.

Best Source: Senior Greg Parks, who will be playing hockey in Europe next season, would always "tell it like it is," especially in a feature that will appear in the Key this year.

Worst Source: Michigan State head coach Ron Mason was the worst. Mason yelled at me in front of a hoard of journalists last year when I asked him why he couldn't stop one of BG's lines. "I don't talk about other teams," he said. But wasn't your team playing against BG Ron?

Media Master: Head hockey coach Jerry York was always poised and level-headed while winning or losing. As a matter of fact, he never had a bad word about the other team and refused to talk about officiating. For the person who covers hockey next season, don't let York fool you. He'll play a game when you go to do an interview of an upcoming team. He pretends to forget the top players on the other team, but I believe he wants to see how much you know. I know he's pretending as he may be the best coach in college hockey at preparing his team for the opponent. Figure it out, he has two advanced degrees in counseling psychology. Gottcha, coach.

Best Photographers: Mark Thalman and Brad Phalin might be students, but they're the best photos I've ever seen. Just ask them. Seriously, BG student publications should feel privileged, because they are sure as heck going to miss them next semester.

Most Unsettling Quote About Me: "You look like a sports reporter." - a friend back home who didn't know what I was doing with my life.

Thank You's: Thanks goes to Bob Bortel, the director of student publications, who gave me the freedom to go where I wanted and write what I felt. Thanks also goes to Tom Reed, an inspiration, who to me was the best sports reporter ever to tickle the keys at the BG NEWS and to Mark Pape, who has always been a sounding board, especially over the many breaks I spent in BG by myself. And to Mike McGath, the only person I know whose been here longer than myself. We can relate to old days. And finally a special thanks to my parents, who I haven't been around long enough in the past six years to tell them how I feel.

My Last Fragment: Good Luck and God Bless. I'll see you in the movies.

Which is your favorite sports team and why?

Frank Castro, junior accounting and international business major from Perrysburg: "Probably the Chicago Bears—because I was born in Chicago and I like the city."

Lori Fox, junior public relations major from Fairfield: "Bengals, because I'm from Cincinnati and they went to the Super Bowl."

Pat Cosgrove, sophomore accounting major from Richmond Heights: "The Cleveland Browns, because I like their defensive style of play."

Vilvi Vannak, freshman undeclared major from Toledo: "I don't like sports, it's a glorified waste of time."

Pet Sematary 'very taut, frightening'

by Brian Lumley

Small crosses sit on the graves of their beloved pets; makeshift tombstones for goldfish, cats, and dogs span over a forgotten tract of land.

These images open the film "Pet Sematary," the newest of the seemingly endless Stephen King novels that have been adapted to the silver screen. King reads well, but on celluloid, his books have not transferred well. "Sematary" defies that law and comes up as a very taut, frightening movie.

The story concerns the recently displaced Creed family from inner-city Chicago to the backwoods of Maine. This nuclear family consists of dad, a young and promising doctor; mom, a young and promising housewife; and two sprightly children. Along for the ride is their cat named Winston Churchill, but affectionately nicknamed "Church." He becomes crucial to the story and stands as a "domino effect" for the rest of the flick. Doc's small daughter worries about her feline buddy, as trucks fly by the roadside house at lightning speed (the reason for the pet cemetery behind the Creed household.)

Well, careless dad lets the cat get run over and as he readies to bury it in the cemetery, along comes Jed (Her- man Munster from TV's "The Munsters"), to tell Doc the secret behind the pet cemetery.

An ancient Indian burial ground lies deep in the woods behind the animal burial ground, a very sacred place capable of returning the dead to life ...

What ensues is very interesting and makes for some very intense horror. Doc's young son, Gage, is killed by a truck and buried in the town plots. Doc refuses to let his young son be taken away by God, and sets out to reclaim his beloved son.

A very helpful ghost comes along every 10 minutes or so and warns our hero of the impending misfortune awaiting whoever disturbs the forces of nature. Well, young Gage comes home, albeit a little different from the sweet young boy he used to be ...

Technically, there was much wrong with this film. Continuity errors were everywhere. (Things in a film that were in one scene but mysteriously disappear in the next, an object placed on a table at one end and then moved to another spot on the table in the next shot, etc.)

A few small errors in the plot were visible, such as the introduction of a maid named Missy. She has no real place in the film; her character either is thrown in to take up time, or part of a subplot that was cut out of the final print of the film. She complains of stomach pains to the doctor, writes a suicide note, and kills herself in fear of a slow retracted death through stomach cancer.

Toward the beginning of the film a small altercation takes place between the husband and wife. Do they get along? Why the exchange of words? It seems that there was also a small subplot involving that also, but was cut out due to time restrictions.

Putting these small inaccuracies aside, the film is still good. Whatever may be missing in terms of narrative is definitely made up for by the vivid scares this film evokes from an audience. What I found most interesting was the neo-Frankenstein angle within the film. A very grief-stricken father defies the laws of nature and undoes a very natural act; that's what makes the film interesting.

The underlying point of "you are responsible for whatever you create" is apparent throughout the whole flick, and is driven home at the end, where the doctor's passions become his own undoings.

This film scared the living hell out of me. On a screen filled with Jasons and Freddie's, this is a fresh new look at the horror flick. The frights abound from scene to scene, and in the screening I attended, the entire crowd was jittery. (Human perspiration made it rather humid in that theater.) After sitting with 200 nervous people in a final next week, take time out to sit with 200 nervous people at "Pet Sematary." You'll find it's more gratifying.

You are laying down in a large area of soft grass. After slowly lifting your Foster Grants, you spot a brown bottle of Tropical Blend, boiling in the sun. Hypnotically you unscrew the lid, massaging the coconut concoction into your winter-white skin hoping for an instant browning. As the heat rises, the steam from your skin causes your eyelids to droop s...l...o...w...l...y closing. SUDDENLY you awake and look around. Everyone is gone. Terrified, you think, "DID I SLEEP THROUGH FINALS?"

As the weather warms up almost everyone would rather be doing anything except studying. Laying out in the sun and other outdoor activities tend to compete with the time needed to study for spring semester finals, according to several University professors.

Richard Weaver, professor of interpersonal and public communication, said he believes students' study problems rise with the mercury.

"I think teachers have a difficult time competing with the sun," Weaver said. "I warn my graduate student teachers about students' attitudes and warn students themselves about saving their absences until the end of the year when they will really want to blow them off."

He said each semester's grades depend on many factors, including the weather and the study atmosphere at certain times of the school year.

"Study is closely correlated to cold weather. In general, exam grades and papers might be better in the fall than in the spring ... it depends. During good weather some students have to make excuses to study instead of excuses not to study."

"Study is closely correlated to cold weather. In general, exam grades and papers might be better in the fall than in the spring ... it depends."

— Richard Weaver

Becky Ragle, third-semester freshman art therapy major, said she doesn't need much encouragement to avoid doing homework or studying for spring finals.

"My GPA is higher in the fall because I have spring fever bad. There's nothing better to do in the fall but study. But as soon as it starts warming up I'd rather be having fun," Ragle said.

Marjorie Hufford, director of records, said semester GPAs vary from school year to school year; for example, the spring semester of 1987 had a higher GPA than the fall, but this year's fall semester's GPA is higher than the previous spring.

"This fall, women's and men's average GPAs were 2.786 and 2.553 respectively; while the College of Musical Arts had the highest average of 2.998, the College of Business Administration had the lowest average of 2.507," Hufford said. William Baxter, associate professor of biological sciences, said the curve in his Biology 205 class seems to be higher during spring semester than during the fall.

"Spring fever doesn't seem to be dramatic in my class because it is composed mostly of freshmen who tend to do better their spring semester because they gained some experience during first semester," Baxter said.

Lewis Fulcher, associate professor of physics and astronomy, explained his "study ideology" by comparing the preparation for finals with getting in shape.

"The key to success is the same for finals as other periods. You need self-discipline to keep up with the materials," Fulcher said. "You can't keep in shape if you don't exercise three times a week. The same goes for studying," Fulcher said.

Weaver said he believes students have to ask themselves some important questions in the face of spring fever.

"How bad do you want this? Are you willing to sacrifice a whole 15-week course, a grade or your future by blowing off the next two weeks ... In the end I think most students would be able to control this urge," Weaver said.

Hacker pads Dean's list

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A computer hacker with a sense of honor padded the dean's list at Valley College with such names as Wrath Kahn, Gray Poupon, Hans Zoff, Roger Overndow and Warren Peese.

Seventy names added to the list published in the school newspaper included Betty Crocker, Dee Genet, Rex Karrs, Claire D. Aisle and about 25 real students.

"I personally feel it's insulting," said Lisa Walker, student body president-elect, a sophomore who made the list the hard way. "People work hard to be on the dean's list. It's not just a little thing to me."

Making the list requires at least a 3.6 grade-point average out of 4.0. The list apparently was doctored after it arrived at the newspaper.

University students are fans of a wide variety of major league baseball teams.

Toledo area home to diverse sports loyalties

by John Kohlstrand

Northwest Ohio is somewhat of an enigma in the realm of professional sports. Major league teams have never ventured to Toledo, and minor league teams such as the IHL's Goaldiggers and AAA baseball's Mudhens have, for the most part, struggled.

Consequently the arrival of spring, a time when baseball caps replace snow caps on the streets, brings a time of confusion and heated battle for Northwest Ohio major league sports fans. Who roots for the superior baseball team?

While the Detroit Tigers are physically closer, the Cleveland Indians have the advantage of playing in the same state. Beside these two teams with major followings, the Cincinnati Reds and minor league Toledo Mudhens also serve to confuse matters.

But have area sports fans adopted one team over the others?

Rocky Alessandrini, manager of USA Sports at Southwyck Mall in Toledo, says his store sells more Tigers items by far.

"The team is actually closer, and they have more of a winning tradition than the Indians have," he said.

According to Kevin Savage, owner of the Sports Gallery in Toledo, his store has also sold more Tigers items in the past. So far this season, however, sales have been fairly even between the Tigers and Indians.

The Tigers' successes in past seasons have accounted for their larger sales, he said.

"The Tigers have been good the last five years," he said, "but the Tigers are down this year and the Indians fans are hopeful."

He said his store typically sells more Indians items in the early season, when the Indians are usually competitive.

"About June, we can't sell any Indians items at all."

Savage said that the movie Major League may also be helping Indians' sales.

In Bowling Green, sports fans' opinions seems divided.

"It's fairly even," said John Mura, owner of Falcon House Sporting Goods at 125 South Main St. He said sales of Indians materials have been slightly higher than for the Tigers so far this season, but it is too early to tell.

"If the Indians continue to play the way they are, we will sell a lot more. We have a lot of kids from the Cleveland area here," Mura said.

Lew Laslo, owner of Great Lakes Sporting Goods at 128 W. Wooster St., said his baseball sales are predominantly Reds and Tigers items. He attributes this to the winning ways of Cincinnati and Detroit.

"We're in an area where the Tigers, Indians, and Reds, are all popular," he said. "The Reds have been winning, the Tigers have been winning, and the Indians have not."

Laslo suggested that Indians sales would pick up if the team plays competitively this season.

University student John Pastrick, a freshman computer science major from Cleveland, said he likes the Indians because they are his hometown team.

"I stick with them — no matter what, winning or losing, they're my team," he said.

Shelley Brazeau, a freshman legal studies major from the Cleveland area, said the Indians were an institution in Cleveland.

"It's a Cleveland tradition, it's a part of Cleveland. You have the stadium, steel workers and the Tribe."

Chris Cornell, freshman history-political science major, is a Tigers fan because of his childhood.

"I was born in Detroit, I grew up in the area, and they're my team," he said.

Mark Franks, a journalism major from Springfield, said his childhood also had an impact on picking his favorite team.

"Every night, we would sit out in the summer and listen to Reds games," Franks said. "They beat everyone by 10 runs that year."

Seemingly forgotten are the Toledo Mudhens. Lisa Graves, freshman English major from Toledo, echoed the sentiments of many when she said, "I don't follow the Mudhens because they stink!"

It would seem that Northwest Ohio is sort of a "melting pot" for baseball teams — a melting pot in which the Mudhens are excluded. Die hard fans of teams from both leagues inhabit this area, and it would seem that the area will be a fertile ground of debate for years to come.

Sheepish Grin shows staying power

by Frank Esposito

Things move fast in hip college music scenes. Bands come and go like thieves in the night. They're formed on whimsical notions and wanton desires. It's a herculean task (with classes, jobs, torrid love affairs, run-ins with the law, and furious bouts of self-love) to establish any kind of continuity.

But two and one-half years have come and gone and Sheepish Grin is still here.

They've changed lineups a few times and the current lineup has stuck around for almost a year, but Paul Johnson (guitar), Troy Raszka (bass), and Larry Zengel (drums) are still bashing out high-energy, original, pizza-spittin' rock 'n' roll.

Their second cassette, Peggy, has sold over 200 copies to date, which was a lot more than the band expected to sell. This winter they released a cassette of songs recorded in 1987 entitled Hippopotamus (in an uncanny parallel to R.E.M.'s Eponymous which was suspiciously released around the same time ... makes ya wonder, don't it?) which joined the 1987 release Sheepish Grin in the band's cassette triumvirate.

I talked to Sheepish in the Union, where all the cool people hang out, and the conversation rambled from exploding heads to girls in red sweaters. The possibility of Johnson's horrible demise in a collapsing staircase/punji stick deathtrap was discussed. And somewhere in there, I got answers to some burning questions.

SG has no plans for a release in the near future but they explained that they are building on another aspect of their rock environment. "We got new T-shirt ink!" beams Raszka. On a more serious note, they're planning on taking a trip through the Southeast, playing gigs in Kentucky, Tennessee, and Georgia.

Their evolution has included the move from a cover band to a mostly original act. "We were getting big crowds doing covers," says Johnson, "but it felt stupid doing covers when we had originals. When we made the switch, our crowds really dropped."

Having been around for a while, SG is cautiously optimistic about the BG rock scene. "It's taken off. Bowling Green needs a club for original bands, like Dillon's (the band's fave gig spot)," said Raszka. "Some people think it's the next big thing."

None of SG's members can pinpoint any trends in the BG scene. "It's easy to label any college band that plays guitars as R.E.M.," explained Raszka. "We were all basically influenced by '70s AM radio. Neil Diamond changed my life," intoned Johnson, without the slightest hint of sarcasm.

As far as their own music is concerned, their songs are getting "more varied, tempo-wise."

Toward the end of our rambling discourse, Johnson said, "We're the best original band in Ohio." Then he smiled.

But I think that Johnson had earlier summed up what Sheepish Grin wants to do. After a number of ideas and opinions concerning this schizophrenic, wind-swept landscape were kicked around, Johnson wearily added, "Bowling Green needs a kick in the ass."

You can tell he's graduating in August.

I hope Sheepish Grin stays together.

Some reruns never die

by Michelle Hrusovsky

Gee Wally ... old television reruns like "I Love Lucy," "Father Knows Best," "Mr. Ed," "Star Trek," "The Monkees," "Batman," and over a dozen more are sure on television an awful lot.

This is in addition to newer reruns including "M*A*S*H," "Family Ties" and "The Cosby Show."

According to University popular culture professor Christopher Geist, old television reruns are making much more money now than during their original prime time debuts. In addition, most are earning more money than the majority of prime time television programs currently on the air.

"One segment of a prime time show may cost the producer half a million dollars. The cost of running old reruns is gravy in comparison to producing new programming," Geist said. "They are excellent, inexpensive time-fillers."

Many people may not realize there are only a few seasons of "Gilligan's Island" episodes. However, those few seasons have reaped enormous profits in over 20 years of syndication.

Geist explained the audience of rerun watchers is diverse.

Some viewers include baby boomers who watch shows from the '50s to remember their youth. To accommodate this audience, the Christian Broadcasting Network has begun airing a Saturday morning lineup of shows only from the '50s.

Other viewers include children who tune into the cable children's network Nickelodeon for shows including "Leave it to Beaver" and "The Donna Reed Show."

The vast majority of the audience, however, just likes pure entertainment.

"The Brady Bunch" is my favorite show. I can usually tell which episode it is by the time Sherwood Schwartz's name flashes on the screen," said Julia Smith, senior Interpersonal and Public Communications major. "And I usually know most of the lines."

"I think TV today is a joke compared to older shows of the '50s and '60s," said Scott Eppert, sophomore Interpersonal and Public Communications major.

"I really like 'Andy Griffith.' It's just funny and it doesn't have to have a deep plot and make a point to be funny," Eppert added.

Geist explained the key to success for airing old shows is cable television syndication. "Old shows are inexpensive to get and money in the bank for producers," he said.

However, newer reruns including "The Cosby Show" and "Family Ties" are enormously popular but are very expensive to air.

Geist added that in the future, prices of running the newer reruns will most likely decrease. He added, however, that he doesn't know if the newer reruns will have the staying power of shows like "Star Trek" and "The Brady Bunch."

"NORTHWEST OHIO'S ONLY ALTERNATIVE"

Handicap doesn't stop the music

by Tom Kelsey

Few area bands can fit the groove in the pocket like the Glass City All-Stars. Their brand of funky, power-pop rock has recruited a legion of loyal fans from all over Northwest Ohio.

Not surprisingly, the band's style is the offspring of the back beat, and one Dave Fogle, whose flawless chops and smooth vocals seem to move the band along effortlessly.

But Fogle's talents run much deeper than his ability to please the listener's ear. Born with a fingerless left hand, he has still managed to perfect his craft and play in clubs all over the country. And after years of experience on the road, rubbing elbows with a number of rock heavyweights, he finally came home to Toledo with a storehouse of knowledge about the music business and its penchant for corporate conformity.

Fogle's musical odyssey began in Texas, where he was born. His father, a Baptist minister, instilled the fervor and passion of Gospel music upon his family and Dave was encouraged to sing in revival camp sing-alongs. But it wasn't until the family moved to Toledo, when Dave was 10, that he had his first taste of pop music.

"When I moved up from Texas, the biggest station in the area was CKLW (in Detroit). Of course at the time, Motown was really hitting hard, and I just thought that was the coolest stuff I ever heard, because you never heard anything like that in Texas," Fogle said.

Because of his love for music, Fogle tried a number of instruments, including piano and trumpet, but it wasn't until he was 16 that he finally decided to play the drums. Of course some problems arose.

"There was a lot of experimentation in the beginning with how to keep a drumstick on my hand. I first used tape and then rubber bands but these devices tended to turn my hand purple and green," he explained.

Fogle eventually employed the use of a leather strap, but after using the animal hide for a few years, he found that the strap had to be replaced every several months because his perspiration would cause the leather to disintegrate. Finally, just last year, Fogle came across a device that seemed to satisfy his needs. The strap he uses now is constructed of the material used to make artificial limbs.

Form-fitted to his hand by a specialist in the field of prosthetics, the ingenuity of the device definitely has a drummer in mind. To hold the stick itself, a small hoop has been attached to the outside of the strap and is adjusted by a throw-off switch which allows for a drumstick of any size to be inserted, and the whole thing is secured on his wrist by the miracle of Velcro.

Fogle says he doesn't feel self-conscious about the strap these days, but there was a time early on in his career when he tried to hide his handicap.

"When I first started playing, I would wear long-sleeve shirts to hide my hand. I was really conscious of it; I just didn't want to be known as 'The One-Handed Drummer' of the local music scene," he confided. "But now I don't feel self-conscious about it at all. Most people know about it anyway. But of course I still get the guys that come up to me and say, 'Jeez, you're a great drummer,' and then look at my hand and say, 'Oh wow! Like it makes me that much better,'" he said.

It was during the early days of the All-Stars that Fogle started working at the reputable Rick's Drum Shop in Toledo. Fogle says his experience at Rick's has been very helpful in his knowledge of drums because of his easy access to the different types of drumming equipment sold there. Fogle also says he benefits from fellow drummers who call Rick's their Saturday afternoon hangout.

"It's really great working at Rick's because we have 1,300 guys on our mailing list so there's always someone coming in asking for advice or buying something," he said. Fogle also commented that he likes talking drums but he can only show the customer what he personally thinks sounds good.

Although the All-Stars cover funk and jazz-fusion numbers, Fogle says he thinks younger people appreciate the group's music, but complains that for the most part, the kids today are wearing musical blinders due to the lack of variety on local radio stations.

"A lot of attitudes in this area are due to radio programming. I can turn on the radio at any point and I can just about guess what's going to be on there, and it

Shakespeare 'Twig' among mysteries

The Shakespeare Tree stands in front of University Hall.

Friday/Brock Visnich

by Fred Wright

The University and the surrounding community are an interesting place for a journalist. In my year as a reporter, I have had the pleasure (some may say bad luck) of discovering many things about B.G. Some of these things have puzzled me and I thought I'd share some of these Unsolved

Commentary

Mysteries of Bowling Green with you. Here we go. Drumroll, please.

I was walking in front of Moseley Hall one day and I noticed a large rock with a plaque in the middle that reads "Shakespeare Memorial Tree, April 23, 1921, Toledo Chapter." I searched in vain for a huge ancient oak tree dedicated to the plays of William Shakespeare.

What I found instead could be better described as the Shakespeare Memorial Twig. Behind the rock was a tiny tree about to keel over from exhaustion. My question is, does Will sleep soundly in his grave knowing his art is truly appreciated here in Bowling Green?

Another question concerns the use of a bellboy who looks remarkably similar to a certain king of rock and roll on posters advertising summer courses at the University. What does Elvis have to do with summer semester at the University? Do the posters mean President Olscamp is Elvis Presley or that Elvis is going to take summer courses here? Somebody call Mojo Nixon or the Weekly World News to get to the bottom of this!

The next mystery concerns the recent USG election. On the winning ticket of Kevin Coughlin and Colleen McGinty, Coughlin ran for president and McGinty ran for vice president. Why? McGinty is a junior with more experience than Coughlin, who is only a freshman. Perhaps this was a case of shrewd interpretation of demographics. With more girls than guys at the University, perhaps the victorious pair thought they would have a better chance of winning with Coughlin at the top of the ticket because he looks like a young Steve Garvey.

If there are supposedly two girls to every guy here, how come so many of us guys can't find dates? Perhaps that's just a rumor created by the Admissions Office to get us guys to enroll here.

Why is the administration wasting over $500,000 on an information center no one seems to want when that money could be used to hire more teachers to teach more classes so students could get all the classes they need and want? And we wouldn't have to get partial schedules and stand in that damn drop/add line. Have you ever noticed that we spend about one-third of our time in college standing in line? For food, for classes, for books, etc ...

Can someone tell me the significance behind the Administration Building's resemblance to a giant phallic symbol? I'm positive the architect who designed it is somewhere laughing his head off.

25 Years Thanks To You!

Renegade rides rough road to Reno

by Christopher Smith

My reason for going on a student exchange was simple, I got taken in. I've never been one to take chances — least of all by exploring the unknown (unless watching "The Twilight Zone" or "Wild, Wild Kingdom" reruns makes for exploration). But that's just what I did.

Why? Here's how it all started.

I was worn down, like gum on the sole of a shoe. Change seemed the only way of getting back my sanity. My friend Keith said he felt the same way. I told him there was an exchange program that let students go to another school for a semester or two.

"Then let's get the hell outta here," he urged.

"Why not?" I asked myself. And so we embarked on the road to the wild, wild Exchangedom.

Florida and Hawaii looked real warm and real good. Either of those states would do.

The next day we found that we weren't the Ponce de Leons of Bowling Green. Apparently many others had also discovered Florida ahead of us. Ditto for Hawaii. Both schools had already met their exchange quota. Back to the map we went.

The one we ended up choosing didn't have year-round warmth but did have resorts, skiing, and plenty of all-night action. Our new-home-to-be was right on the California/Nevada border — the University of Nevada at Reno.

Yep, we were going to be in "The biggest little city in the world," the home of legalized gambling and prostitution. Of course, such vices held no allure for us and didn't enter into our decision. At least, that's what we were telling our folks at home.

The summer passed and there were only three days left before the big push West. Then the phone rang. It was Keith.

"Smitty (my nickname — an original), I ain't gonna make the trip," I was stunned. "I called BG and told 'em I was goin' back there for school," he continued.

I knew then how Caesar must have felt about that stabbing pain in his back.

"If you call right away you can still go back to BG, too," he said. The knife in my back turned.

Apparently he'd had second thoughts and gotten a bit nervous at the prospect of facing that great unknown which, up to this point, had been the main appeal of our trip. He'd also been listening to our unadventurous friends who wondered whether we were really gonna go through with such a crazy plan.

The real clincher though was that his girlfriend couldn't bear to be without him for a year and he finally gave in to her.

Now I would have to face the trip and many strange people and places alone. I felt sick.

But all was not lost.

My brother Matthew, eager to get away from the stiff at his funeral home, offered to accompany me. Two days later we loaded up my junky old white Mercury Zephyr and hit the road. It was Reno or bust. Little did we know how close we would come to the latter case.

Memories of the drive to Nevada are only a blur now. I remember that we were always cramped in that over-packed car. We even slept in it, except for one night when we sprang for a motel room from midnight to six. Unfortunately for us, a couple of lovers in the next room weren't sleepy.

Back on the road, we were washing down chips with the beverage of our choice and we seemed to be making good time on I-70. It helps when you have a maniac for a brother at the wheel. The car was humming with perfection through the flat expanse of the Midwest. Right up to the time we got to Colorado. Then a huge hunk of rock, aptly called the Rockies, slowed us down.

As we went higher, my whirlwind Zephyr kept getting slower, 60, ...45, ...30, the pedal was floored, ...15 miles per hour and sinking. We made a graceful exit to an open lot to try to figure out what was wrong.

"Maybe the rest will help out the engine," I offered with weak optimism. I knew nothing about cars.

"This is a car, not a horse!" said my cranky brother. He gets that way when passing motorists hurl abuse at him. All I could think about was how we'd have to have the car towed to a garage by some greasy mechanic whistling the tune of the soon-to-be rich.

Luckily, my brother knew his cars.

"What a piece of crap!" he said. "I don't know how the hell we made it this far."

Matthew decided the carburetor wasn't adjusted to the thin air of the high mountains. The poor car was suffering the equivalent of a severe asthma attack. So he monkeyed around with it and, after about an hour, he declared it roadworthy.

Personally, I think he just let the car rest, but what do I know?

The rest didn't seem to help the car much but we eventually did make it to the top. We were home-free. Utah just breezed by and then we were in Nevada. And more mountain ranges. My trusty Zephyr didn't let us down this time though. It only slowed to a respectable 25 mph.

"Maybe it's built a little endurance now that it's gotten used to all this climbing," I surmised.

"This is a car, not a marathon runner!" snapped Matthew.

Despite our car troubles, we finally made it to Reno. Matthew took a bus back to Ohio the next day and had the worst trip of his life. That's saying a lot, given our trip west. He ended up switching to an airplane. Keith stayed at BG with his girlfriend. They broke up and he had a crummy year. I was at UNR for the year and had the time of my life. But then, that's another story in itself.

Dawson finishes year with a smile

by Christopher J. Dawson

Well, it's that time of year. Yep, school is drawing to a close, as is my creativity (or lack thereof). So it's now time to reflect on these last two semesters in this, my gala Year In Review Annual Column that I started last year.

First off, I finally got respectable and became a professional journalist by becoming the assistant editor of this fine magazine. Oh, some would scoff at me and say that I did it to get the cash and all the free stuff that comes in. Frankly, they're right. C'mon, who wouldn't take a cushy job like this? OK, it isn't all beer and skittles, especially on Thursday nights when I have to come in and compose all of the headlines, but for the outrageous amount of money they're paying me, it ain't too bad!

Because of my new duties, I've been unable to write as many columns as I'd like. Of course, another good reason is that I just haven't been able to come up with that many new and original ideas. Next year, I'll just recycle my freshman columns. Seriously though, it is tough to come up with column ideas. I merely want to amuse my readers, not offend or insult them.

However, I still get hate mail from people who haven't figured out that this column is SATIRE. Please refer to the dictionary to learn the meaning of SATIRE. With a title like "Tongue in Cheek," I think it's pretty obvious that this isn't a column dealing with relevant social issues, such as abortion, sexism, racism, or religious stuff.

All in all, this was a pretty awesome year. I finally got a full schedule for the first time in two years, so I really can't make any jokes about drop/add. To all of you who have to go through that long, occasionally futile and painful process, you have my sympathy.

Generally speaking, though this was a great year for me personally, it was "boredom as usual" here in BG. Oh sure, Rob Lowe stopped by, and we were subjected to UB40 and Violent Femmes (I still think having Jimmy Buffett here would be the ultimate concert) and of course the highlight of the year was the visit by our president.

This brings me to probably the strongest editorial opinion I shall have this year. To all of you people who carried signs at the Reagan speech protesting whatever, I curse you mightily. You blocked me almost completely. I have never had the opportunity to see a president before, and probably will never have an opportunity to see one again so close. I did see Ronnie once, after jumping up and down, trying to see over those stupid signs.

Now, before all of you sign-bearers are going to write in and complain about me being so reactionary and close-minded for supporting that imperialist bourgeoisie, Ronald Reagan, take note of what I am about to say. I do not like Ronald Reagan (in my opinion, Harry S. Truman was our last good president), nor do I like his policies. However, I do respect the office of the president of the United States, which you people should learn to do. No matter how bad the president is personally, he still is the president and deserves some respect. Please let me know when you are going to burn me in effigy, sign-bearers, so I can open up my schedule to watch.

Now back to the humor. Let's talk about my love life, shall we? No, I can't make jokes about something that doesn't exist. I can talk about my wonderful life in a dorm room. Last year I lived in the Quads, (Freshman City) but I learned from my mistake and proceeded to move to Rodgers, the fun dorm with rooms that aren't microscopic.

I would like to say I'm joining the exodus of people moving off-campus, but alas, I cannot. Instead, I'll rationalize and say that by living on-campus for another year I'll at least know where my next meal is coming from, and I don't have to clean my own bathroom. Yeah, Rodgers is known for having more fire drills than any other dorm in the Free World, but that's such a small price to pay for having a dorm so close to all my classes.

I would like to advise everyone who wants a fun roommate to get a rugby player for a roommate. If you really like hearing stories about illegal hits in a "scrum," or how strong the "pack" is, these guys are for you. I'm joking, of course, but since my roomie, Marty, is one of these demented psychopaths I can get away with it. Thanks, Marty for being such a good roomie. Hopefully if the faceless bureaucrats in housing see fit to giving my pal Joey on-campus housing for next year, he'll be a good roomie, too. As for the rest of you guys from Rodgers Second East, thanks.

It'll be quiet next year without you.

In closing, I would like to say that this year was pretty good. I think I personally grew and matured as a person this year, and even my columns matured ever so slightly. I'm sure that I'm now in the deepest throes of the dreaded sophomore slump, since I really have no ambition to study, read my assignments, or show up in class. Does it end or does it last until death? I don't know. As I look toward the end of this semester (that isn't coming fast enough) and look forward to my fun and low-paying summer job of making Triptiks for AAA, I think that the sophomore slump is just another way of saying "adulthood."

Area band avoids controversial label

by Tina Diorio

The Stain, a Toledo-based band, has just recently finished work on their latest album, scheduled for international distribution pending some last minute work. Their last album did even better in Europe than in the United States.

The album will be called Banned because of some problems involving the band's last album cover, I Know the Scam, which pictured a man dressed in a Toledo police officer's uniform holding bribe money.

Controversy is nothing new to the members of the Stain. Last year, while playing at the warehouse on Manville Avenue, a fight broke out which caused area police to end further shows there.

The show got off to a shaky start when then lead singer Scot Law came running out and slid off the stage pulling some of the lighting and a monitor with him. Law's nose was broken in the fall, but the band continued to play.

The fight occurred when an unruly fan tried to jump on stage several times. When he jumped at guitarist Mike Moore, he "kicked 'em in the face." The youth was thrown out and gathered a group of friends together, who got bats and began hitting people during the show.

Fights often occur during Stain shows, due to the intense energy level that the band puts out, especially that of former lead singer Scot Law.

During the band's first show at the University of Toledo, an excited member of the audience jumped up on stage grabbing Law, who broke a microphone over the assailant's head. The microphone was one of three that had been broken that evening, as well as Moore's amplifier. Law had to be carted away in an ambulance because of broken ribs suffered during the episode.

Another event occurred when the band was playing at a "biker bar" and their homemade flashpots caught the stage and the Stain banner on fire.

More recently the band has been promoting their albums by playing at Club Stain, in Toledo, as well as receiving sponsorship from Protex condoms and Vision Street Wear.

The band does background music for the Vision Street Wear commercials as well as spots for Snowshreaders, MTV and ESPN.

In addition to the three albums, the band has also done a number of compilation albums under their label, Mystic Records, the largest underground label operating out of Hollywood, Calif.

Also, the band has released an EP, titled Skinheads Poke Goat to protest the nazi skinhead movement.

The Stain's first venture onto a different label is a Canadian-pressed compilation album called Kamikaze Stegosaurus From Outer Space, which was released two weeks ago.

Baby Boom backlash

CHICAGO (AP) -- Baby boomers move over. Three guys in their 20s are talking about their generation and promising to "end the '60s in your lifetime."

"Let's make nostalgia a thing of the past!" is the rallying cry of the National Association for the Advancement of Time, whose members say they're tired of the boomers' cultural agenda.

"There's so many of them. If they want to live in their past, that's fine — but they're forcing ME to live in their past," gripes Bruce Dillenburg, 29, of Chicago. He founded NAF-TAT with friends Bruce Elliott of Los Angeles and John Keeney of New York City.

Dillenburg and Elliott got together in 1987 and discovered their mutual exasperation with "oldies" radio. They decided it was time to get the Monkees off their backs.

mystery

Any truth to the rumor that Brother Jed and Sister Cindy are next year's Freddie and Frieda Falcon?

With the abundance of good local bands in the area, why does Howard's continue to book mostly nonlocal bands?

Did you ever notice that one small box of cereal in the cafeterias costs 60 cents and a package of six little boxes of cereal costs $1.97 at Krogers? Food Operations gets their food at wholesale price so why do they charge twice as much? I know they have operating costs but they're supposed to be non-profit. The prices they charge are ridiculous. Also, if you live on campus you have to buy from Food Operations. Something stinks there besides the food.

I think I'll call the Fox Network.

bugs the hell out of me. I mean, give the kids a chance to listen to different forms of music," Fogle said.

Dave Fogle's plans for the future are to continue playing in the area and to do some more recording. A self-produced cassette that the band put out this year is available at Mad Hatter Records in Bowling Green. He also said that he still has some personal goals to reach such as perfecting a rapid double-stroke roll, a basic drum rudiment that is difficult to do because of the strap. "If I can just get that down, I feel there will be no stopping me," he said with a smile. Surely, nothing has ever stopped him before.

I'm Reaching My Brother

This wall has steel spikes.
I have wounds all over my body.
To get to the top, I fought against all the odds, nods and cries.
Each inch I got to the heavens,
someone would give my back another striking blow
After a long fight I made it, I can see what I left behind.
Now I see you my brother, struggling to the top.
I won't leave you!!
I remember how hard it was for me.
Let me help you.
I lay my body flat on the cold flat surface and extend my arm to you my brother, with unlimited strength
Our fingers touch, then a tight grasp Lifting him, he is yelling
"there is something burning at my feet"
I look down to see an american flag up in flames.

Mai Morto

He stood alone on the mountain side.
Not one of his kind could he find.
Alone he stood, his kind wasn't there
And he thought, "They must be somewhere."

"Where? Where is my kind? What went wrong?
Our numbers were so very stong.
Oh where? Oh where, I need a mate!
This is such a terrible fate!"

"I sense my death is very near.
Oh God that's a great, great fear!
It's now that I lay me down to die,
That I ask the question, 'Oh God why?'"

He is dead, but he's not alone
He has gone to an empty zone.
His kind, many kinds, they are there,
but there is no one, who knows where.

Some so gorgeous, that, s why they're here.
Killed for that coat they would bear.
Others to slow to run away,
But all were pprecious in some way.

On Earth they were all beautiful
And all were very wonderful, but they're creatures no man will see for they are gone for eternity.

The Flower

The Flower gives the sun meaning and purpose in life.

As the Flower also needs the sun
to grow

Sometimes they behave like they do not need each other

When in actuality they really do

The Flower and sun are something every one can watch grow

The sun gets up early just to help the Flower grow

The Flower would also wake with the Sun because it too wanted to give the sun a reason to shine

In time the Flower learned to grow on its own

The sun was then left all alone

If she only knew the sun thought
Why I get up as early as I do

The time has passed on without her

With days and nights we no longer share

Friends who became one are no longer together

My vision is no longer clear

I cannot see her although she is near

If the winds do not carry us back to each other

Then heaven is where I will find her

A Moment in Time

On an evening as beautiful as this one.

I want to share it with you.
The peace and quiet of a small town at twilight,

The chill of an early spring evening, perfect for walking hand-in-hand

The red sun and white clouds fading to a color that no artist could ever mix on his palate.

Looking at all of this makes my heart yearn for you.

I don't know who you are, but I have faith that one day
I will find you.

Don't even think about callin' back

Do You Want Another Bomb?

Look Around
What do you see?
I see innocent people getting mowed down
With no one to hear their plea

Why do we spend money on bombers?
When people are homeless and hungry
Do you really think they want to be that way?
Or do you think they want help?

A little compassion is all I'm asking for A little governmental mental sense
A little hope

A little sense of luck that I wasn't born into their sorrow

Do you choose to ignore the homeless?
Look at them, stare if you must
Because the problem isn't going away
They don't want to be that way

I look around
And see too much selfish greed
When other people have a more important need
We turn our backs
As if caring for them was a dirty deed

Deep Inside

As I watch the rain fall I think of
you. What you gave, what I gave, and what we gave to one another — our love, friendship, and most of all ourselves.
For what reason I have no idea I just know we have something special no two other people will ever have. As each drop falls I remember the times we've spent together either in spirit, emotion or side by side in silence. But just as each drop waits for the others to fall — I too wait to see in your eyes once again the contentment and warmth they reveal when we are together. As I see the raindrops disappear and dry up into sunshine I still find myself wanting to help and know more about the person that you hide DEEP INSIDE yourself.

And question, WHY did he choose ME?
